You're Welcome

Bill Bryson, an American writer who had lived in Britain for ten years, returned to the USA to rediscover his homeland. He borrowed his mother's old Chevrolet and drove 13,978 miles through 38 states, keeping mainly to side roads and small towns. This is Bryson's description of a meal in a town called Littleton in New Hampshire.

It was the friendliest little place I had ever seen. I went into the Topic of the Town restaurant. The other customers smiled at me, the lady at the cash register showed me where to put my jacket, and the waitress, a plump little lady, couldn't do enough for me.

She brought me a menu and I made the mistake of saying thank you. "You're welcome," she said. Once you start this there's no stopping. She came and wiped the table with a damp cloth. "Thank you," I said. "You're welcome," she said. She brought me some cutlery wrapped in a paper napkin. I hesitated but I couldn't stop myself. "thank you," I said. "You're welcome," she said.

I ordered the fried chicken special. As I waited I became uncomfortably aware that the people at the next table were watching me and smiling at me in a slightly crazy way. The waitress was watching me too. Every few minutes she came over and asked if everything was all right. Then she filled my glass with iced water and told me my food would only be a minute.

"Thank you," I said.

"You're welcome," she said.

Finally, the waitress came out of the kitchen with a tray size of a table-top and started putting plates of food in front of me – soup, a salad, a plate of chicken, a basket of hot bread rolls. It all looked delicious. Suddenly I realized I was starving.

The waitress wanted to know if she could get me anything else.

"No, this is just fine, thank you." I answered with my knife and fork ready to attack the food.

"Would you like some ketchup?"

"No, thank you."

There was enough gravy to drown a horse. "Yes, plenty of gravy, thank you."

"How about a cup of coffee?"

"Really I'm fine."

You're sure there's nothing I can do for you?"

"Well, you might push off and let me eat my dinner," I wanted to say, but I didn't of course. I just smiled sweetly and said no thank you.

For questions 9–35, read the text below. Open the brackets and use the right form of the verb. There is an example at the beginning (0).

Isaac Newton (0 – so interest) was so interested in different problems that he became quite absent-minded. One day a gentleman (9 – come) came to see him, but he (10 – tell) told that Isaac Newton was busy in his study and that nobody (11 – allow) allowed to disturb him.

As it (12 – be) was dinner time, the visitor (13 – sit) sat down in the dining room (14 – wait) waited for the scientist. The servant came in and (15 – place) placed on the table a boiled chicken under a cover. An hour (16 – pass) has passed but Newton (17 – not appear) didn't appear. The gentleman (18 – feel) felt really hungry. After he (19 – eat) ate the chicken, he (20 – cover) covered up the skeleton. He (21 – ask) asked the servant to prepare another one for his master. Before the second chicken (22 – cook) was cooking, however, the scientist (23 – enter) entered the room and (24 – apologize) apologized for his delay. Then he added, "As I (25 – feel) felt rather tired and hungry, I (26 – hope) hoped you (27 – excuse) excuse me a little longer, while I (28 – take) am taking my dinner, then I (29 – be) will be at your service." With these words he (30 – lift) lifted the cover, and without emotion (31 – turn) turned round to the gentleman and (32 – say) said + , “See how strange scientists (33 – be) are + . I quite (34 – forget) that I (35 – dine) have dined + already.”

Task 3
